SportsBOYS CAN'T DECIDE
WHOSE DOG PARD IS;
GIVE HIM TWO HOMES

(Last day of "The Finding of Pard")
It was three o'clock that afternoon when Sam and Eddie, explorers bold, marched carefully into Northvale with the little rough-coated fox-terrier they had found in the cave, in their arms. His front left leg was broken, and he had probably crawled into Dolan's cave as a place of refuge. Though he was yet in misery his whines were less mournful.

"Yes, his leg is broken," announced Mr. Parker in Parker's drug store where the boys had immediately taken the dog for an inspection. "And it has gone for so long I don't know whether I can fix it or not, but I'll try." With the assistance of Eddie and Sam, splints and bandages were put on the dog's leg and food was given him. He seemed a stranger in Northvale—no one recognized him.

So the matter of a home for him came next. "I guess he won't let me have him," said Eddie, and Sam believed his mother wouldn't give her consent either.

But at home that night just after supper, Eddie brought up the subject of dogs. "May I have one, Mother, please—please, Ma?"

"Well, all right, if it's a nice dog," Whereupon Eddie started the story of the finding of the terrier. "An' I'm going to keep him," he concluded.

But in Sam's home the same thing was taking place. So at seven o'clock as Sam hurried to Parker's where he was to meet Eddie, he primed himself to announce the fact that he would give the dog a home.

"No you don't!" determined Eddie firmly as Sam related his intentions. "That dog's mine—I found him, and I'm going to keep him!"

In a minute the wrangling had grown so hot that Dad Hornblower was forced to butt in.

"Own him together, boys," he suggested. "One keep him for one week and the other for the next."

Both Eddie and Sam agreed it was a good plan. "An' we can call him Pard—Partner for short, can't we?"

So Pard, having listened carefully to the heated argument, and Dad's suggestion, raised his little head and barked approval. And why shouldn't he? Wasn't he to have two homes?

"TRAILING PARTY"
EVER HAVE ONE?

A "Trailing Party," something novel in the way of club games, suggested in the Woodcraft Manual of the Y. W. C. A. Clubs, was recently tried out by the Westinghouse High School Club, of Huron, South Dakota, with much success. A trail was laid that led the followers around the outskirts of the town and then, much to their delight (for they probably were very hungry after the long walk) through the back entrance of a restaurant where they were served with soup and wafers.

At a party of the High School Y. W. C. A. girls of University Place, Nebraska, all the characters of the "funny papers" came to life. Every guest was dressed to represent some character in the comic paper, or some well-known advertisement. Many were so cleverly represented that no introductions were necessary. The "Goulds Twins" were awarded the prize for having the best costumes. Because the party was voted such a success the girls are thinking of making it an annual affair.

OLDEST CATHOLIC PRIEST IS DEAD

Father Dandurand, of Winnipeg, Claimed to Have Been 102 Years Old.

WINNIPEG, Man., May 27.—Father Damase Dandurand, oldest Catholic priest in the world, is dead at St. Boniface, a suburb of Winnipeg. He was 102 years old.

Father Dandurand was born at La Prairie, Quebec, in 1819. The record of his birth is still in the parish archives. He was educated at Chambly and ordained to the priesthood when 22 years old. He was appointed to Ottawa in 1844 when the present capital of Canada was known as Bytown and labored there 30 years. He was the first Canadian priest to join the Order of Oblates in 1842 and at his death was dean of the 3,000 members of the order throughout the world.

He came to St. Boniface in 1875. Winnipeg, across the Red river, was a group of cabins under the walls of Fort array. The "bells of St. Boniface," celebrated by Whittier, called to worship in the little mission church only Indians and trappers. The Hudson's Bay company had just surrendered its proprietary and governing powers over the whole western Canada to the now dominion government.

The young priest saw the buffalo vanish and the settlers come. He saw wigwam villages give place to towns and cities and the prairie wilderness change into prosperous farms. Time was when Father Dandurand was known to practically every man, woman and child in Manitoba. His life at St. Boniface epitomized the marvelous agricultural and industrial development of western Canada.

On his 100th birthday, two years ago, he celebrated high mass in St. Boniface cathedral. He was present a little later at the reception to the Prince of Wales in Winnipeg and the priest of the pioneer past stretched out his hand in blessing to the king of the future.

Father Dandurand was conscious almost to the minute of his death. His last words were of thanks for the prayers of his brother Oblates and of joy that it had been granted him to sink to his last rest on the day of the Feast of St. Joseph.

THIS GIFT IS WELCOME.

If you desire to remember with a present some friend or former chum living at a distance, purchase a box of stationery, give a sheet to your one-time mutual friends and ask them each to write a favorite recipe on it. Then collect these sheets, make them into a neat book and send it. It will be appreciated because it is personal.

Confessions Of A Husband!

The Man's Side of Married Life

My Father-in-law Gets Frisky.

On Saturday night Sid called me up and asked me to come to his house to play cards. I had been out one night that week and did not feel like leaving again.

But as I was making my excuses over the phone Dad surprised me by interrupting and saying:

"Yes, you must go; I know you'll enjoy it. Father will go with you; he'd like a card game."

"What about you and your mother?"

"We've a great deal to talk over; we'll be glad to be left alone."

I knew how welcome Dad's father would be in the game. Once before he had played with my friends and had left with all the money. He was the "toughest" player I had ever met. Still, there was nothing to do but take him along.

There were seven of us. Sid, who was the soul of hospitality, had uncorked two bottles of whisky—the last he had left (they always are)—and put them on the sideboard in the dining room.

Along about 10 o'clock I went into the dining room and took a little drink of the Scotch, reflecting that it might be a long time before I got another.

I happened to glance at the bottle of rye and was surprised to see that it was about half gone. I knew that most of the boys drank Scotch. However, I thought little of that then.

When I returned to the game I noted with even greater surprise that my father-in-law was betting recklessly. He stood pat on a pair of jacks and bluffed out Sid who had three nines. Sid knew my father-in-law's reputation and thought he must have at least a straight.

Suddenly I understood it. I connected my father-in-law's wild betting with the disappearance of the rye and that with his frequent absences from the room.

For a time his luck stood by him. Then it changed—and how quickly! Luck at cards can change! He bet as though he were playing for matches.

Whenever he had two pairs he would raise until he was called. Between hands he told long, rambling stories about what a sport he had been as a young man.

The fellows were as quick as I to guess what had happened. But, remembering their former experience with my father-in-law, they showed him no mercy.

At the end of the evening he and Sid, whose whisky he had drunk, were the only losers. However, Sid's losses were trifling. My father-in-law had lost $53. I was some $7 to the good.

My father-in-law had had too good a time and was still too much under the influence of the liquor he had drunk to mind losing. He paid very cheerfully.

We walked home together and he sang most of the way. The elevator boy was asleep and I helped "dad," as he insisted upon my calling him, up the steps to our apartment.

I unlocked the door and tried to guide him as we entered, but he fell, bringing down a umbrella stand with a veritable clatter.

Dad and her mother put their heads out of their respective doors. Dad switched on the light.

"Tom! What have you done?" they exclaimed in chorus.

Contrary to past practice, composition road surfaces are being put down by the French highway authorities in the Rhone valley. At Givors a test is being made of two miles of an Italian composition. This has a cement basis and is guaranteed for 15 years. The road authorities have expressed their willingness to experiment with competitive types of road material. Of 33,000 miles of roads that required repairs at the time of the armistice 13,620 miles have been greatly improved, and 2,200 miles have been completely repaired.—Compressed Air Magazine.
